That he will succeed in the army work there is no doubt, and should the war continue for any length of time, we predict that he will advance rapidly.

He deserves especial praise because of the fact that he is the youngest fellow from Mason county to receive S. N. Bradford filed suit against a commission. SPENDING OUR BILLIONS

Any private business that handled its expenditures the way the United States government does would probably go bankrupt. So would any individual. In private life we generally regulate our outgo according to our income. in agreement with a general, continuous, coherent plan. It is only in public life that we spend money at haphazard, for any purpose that seems good at the moment, without considering where the funds are to come from or what further outlay will be entailed.

President after president has sought to establish a budget plan, by which the estimates of administrative departments would be sys. tematized and harmonized, and congress would know exactly what was expected of it. But always the reform has been balked. Inertia and red tape and partisan politics have perpetuated the old, chaotic procedure by which every head of a department asks, year in and year out, for a great deal more money than he needs or expects, and every senator and representative grabs what he can for his state or district, and legitimate undertakings are turned down or starved while millions go for "pork."

At a time when we are engaged in the most expensive venture of our history, this foolishness ought to stop. The grab-bag and guess-work policy ceases to be tolerable when expenditures are reckoned in tens of billions of dollars. In the last session, congress seldom knew, within several billions, how much money it would be expected to vote.

There was some reason for uncertainty, in the hurry of vast war preparations, with so many unfamiliar factors entering into the computation. But the shaping and passage of those appropriation bills would have been immensely easier if a suitable budget system had been already established. And surely there will be no excuse for any such confusion hereafter.

The administration is said to be trying now, with the help of some of our big financiers, to work out a better method of handling government appropriaations for the remainder of the war. The reform is so desirable that any reasonable opposition to it is inconceivable.

READING THE BIBLE

In New York, as in most American cities, the Bible has long been barred from the public schools because of sectarian opposition. Recently there was a big mass meeting held in Carnegie Hall at which Protestants, Catholics and Jews joined in an appeal to have religious instruction re-introduced.

The men and women interested in this matter insist that there ought to be some such element in public education, because otherwise thousands of boys and girls grow up without any moral or religious training whatever. There is little Bible-reading in the average home nowadays, and the Sunday School doesn't occupy the place it used to. It is argued that if education means the building of character as well as the instruction of the mind, there must be some sort of religious teaching. And many educators insist that it can be accomplished without any undue secrarian influence, or any offense to

It is held to be sufficient, for school purposes, to deal with principles that are common to all great religions. And certainly the Old Ttestament, which is revered by Jew, Protesant, Catholic and Mohammedan, affords plenty of opportunity for ennobling instruction.

From another viewpoint, too, it is a pity that Bible-reading has so largely vanished from the schools. No one can know English literature, or indeed any modern European literature, without knowing the fundamentals of Biblical lore. So ignorant are many present-day high-school and college students of this great storehouse of poetry, history, romance and prophecy that allusions to Biblical characters or incidents which were as familiar as every-day life to their parents or grandparents mean nothing at all to them.

If the Bible can't be read in the common schools, owing to sec. tarian objections, why not read it as literature in the high school and college? It is at least as deserving of study as the poetic fables of Greek and Roman gods and demigods over which students spend so

COAL AND THE KAISER

The government has gained another able ally in the person of "Mother" Jones, who has probably more influence with miners than any other American. "Mother", despite her record as an inveterate enemy of everything tending to limit the absolute freedom of labor, agrees with Fuel Administrator Garfield's plan for the settlement of coal-mine disputes, and is trying to line up "her boys" to increase

"It is our duty to stand by the president of the nation in this crisis," she says. "Help the government now to lick the Kaiser, and then we'll lick hell out of the operators.'

Rather forcible language, but very much to the point! The operators may deserve a licking, but they don't deserve it any more than the Kaiser does. Their punishment can wait, if necessary. The Kaiser's can't.

And maybe if the miners jump in on the Kaiser job, they'll find, before they get very far, that they won't have to bother about the operators. The government and the public can take care of them, i fthe miners do their part.
